It was also short-listed for the Booker Prize in 1981. The White Hotel - Wikipedia Anagnorisis Structurally, "The White Hotel" resembles Nabokov's "Pale Fire", while stylistically it has more in common with Thomas Mann's "The Magic Mountain". There are two main differences from Nabokov's novel: the relative lack of metafictional self-reflexiveness in "The White Hotel" , and D. M. Thomas' respect for Freud, whereas Nabokov says he detests him: The White Hotel by D.M. Thomas D. M. Thomas writes lyrically about horrific events. White Hotel pulls no punches in describing the viciousness of the holocaust. Many will complain that they don't need to read depressing stories but as long as the horrors of genocide remain abstract, we are at risk of repeating those horrors. Thomas | British author | Britannica I never re-read my novels after publication. I'm always already in the next one, and what's gone is gone. Since my novels were all written between 1978 and 2000, this means it's 20 or 30 years since I read most of them, and some I'd almost completely forgotten in any detail. My fiction was, to me, a terra incognita. People would ask "What would you recommend I read next?"
